nor, and often mentioned in the Bible. Some of the trees in the garden where Gita now worked were so old that the Romans saw them when they conquered the world.

At noon the olive-pickers paused to rest. Gita went away alone and ate the handful of chestnuts given her by grandmother. When she returned to the town at night she would have another bit of bread and a raw onion. She seated herself on the edge of the ravine and thought about Raphael as she munched her nuts. Below, this path traversed the ravine and climbed the opposite slope to the wall of a pretty villa, one of the houses occupied for the winter by rich strangers. Gita looked at the villa, with its window shaded by lace curtains, balconies and terraces, where orange-trees were covered with little golden balls of fruit.

"If I were rich like that I would have soup every day, sometimes with macaroni in it," she thought.

Then she turned over a stone with her heavy shoe and it rolled down the hill. Gita uttered a cry. The stone had covered a hole at the roof of the olive-tree where she sat, far away from the other workers. In the hole she saw a green frog; she dropped on her knees to look at it more closely. Yes, it was a green frog. How did it come there? She touched it with her fingers; the frog did not move or croak. Then she took it out carefully. The frog was one of those past-board boxes which appear each year in the shop windows of Paris for Easter presents, in company with fish, lobsters and shells.

Gita raised the lid. Inside were bank bills and a lizard. She knew lizards very well; they were always whisking over the stone walls; but then those were of a sober brown tint, while this one was white until she lifted it, when it sparkled like a dewdrop. The lizard was an ornamental lizard of diamonds. Gita held her breath and closed her eyes. She believed herself asleep. Soon she rose, took the box in her hand and crossing the ravine began to climb the path to the villa above.

As she reached the door a pony-carriage drove up. A big servant with many buttons on his coat told her to go away. Gita paused, holding the box. The pale lady in the carriage, who was wrapped in furs, motioned her to approach. Quickly the girl ran forward and held out the frog.

"I found it in a hole at the foot of the olive tree," she explained. "It must belong to this house."

The lady took the box and opened it, emptying the contents on her lap. There lay the diamond lizard and the roll of French bank notes.

"You see that Pierre was a dishonest servant, although nothing was found on him," said the lady to those about her. "He must have hidden this box in the olive grove to return from Nice later and find it."

Gita listened with her mouth and her eyes wide open. The lady looked at her and smiled.

"You are a good girl," she said. "Then she selected one of the bills and gave it to Gita. It was a note of one hundred francs."

"Now I can marry Raphael!" she cried.

Raphael was standing beside grandmother's chestnut-roaster when both saw Gita running toward them, her cheeks red and her eyes flashing like stars. She had told all about the frog, not only to the but to the neighbors. As for grandmother, she could not hear the story often enough. When she had been a lemon girl no such luck had befallen her.

"Who would have thought of finding a wedding dowry in a frog?" laughed Raphael.

Gita and Raphael are soon to be married in the yellow church on the hill. The olive-pickers in the grove seek for something beside the dark berries; they hope to find a green frog under a stone containing money and a diamond lizard; but this will never again happen."

EMERALD GROVE.

J. Cummings has been under the weather some, but is now getting about.

The storm of Saturday prevented the mail-carrier from making his usual trip. We are indebted for a mail from Janesville on Monday, to Messrs. Squire & Munger.

There are well founded apprehensions of a flood from the ravine in the village when the break-up occurs. It can only be averted by a very gradual thaw. Several families are preparing for it.

The Emerald Grove academy closed its session on Thursday last, March 11. A promising class of students here attended it from the towns of Bradford, Johnston, Harmony, and La Prairie, and the record shows they have done good work. Some general exercises were held in the school room on the afternoon of the last day, and addresses were made by Rev. J. Richardson and J. Cummings Esq. Mr. Jackson then gave some parting words of advice to the school and the students separated with feelings of regret, that the pleasant relations they had sustained to one another and the principal, were now terminated.

HARMONY.

Mr. Alonzo Clark has sold his farm in the northeast part of Harmony to Mr. Witt Crandall. Consideration $3840. Mr. Clark intends to go to Whitewater.

A very quiet wedding took place at the residence of Mr. Hulet Store's last Saturday evening the 12 inst. The contracting parties were Mr. Archie Haden of Johnston, and Miss Nellie Brainard of Harmony. Mr. Will J. Stockman and Miss Alma Story, acting in the capacity of groomsmen and bridesmaid. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Miller of Milton. Only a few friends were invited, yet they received some handsome and useful presents. A beautiful table was spread of which all partook heartily. Mr. and Mrs. Haden went to home-keeping at once at the old home of Mr. Haden's.

Mr. George Wattle and wife returned home last week from the west, where they have been visiting nearly a year. Mrs. Wattle's sister, Kate Dillingbeck, returned with them.

Mrs. Will Akening is dangerously ill.

Mr. Myron Webb returned home from Kansas this week. He reports lots of snow on the way and a good many delays.

Mrs. John Hicks has been very sick, but is now improving.

First Friday being the last day of the month school, taught by Miss Bama, surprised Mrs. Hulet and Alma Story, where she has been boarding, with the present of a beautiful silver pickle dish to Mrs. Hulet and a silver butter knife to Alma Story, as a remembrance of the many happy days spent with them during the past term.

Nearly everyone is complaining of sore throats.

Mr. Ed Turner starts for his home in Idaho this week, accompanied by his brother.

The sad news reached us last Saturday afternoon of the death of Miss Kate Clark, only child of Azro and Angelina early and her short life, and she was warm and true friends, and when but a short time ago she went to Janesville to complete her education, all joined in wishing her success, and looked with pride as she advanced steadily, standing No. 1 in her classes and would have regretted in one year from this spring had she lived. The many friends extend to the parents their sympathy.

Mrs. Elizabeth Zimmerman, very sick with neuralgia of the stomach. Dr. Judd was called in.

We are glad to extend the hand of welcome to Mr. George Atius, and also glad to see him looking so well after his severe illness. John reports very little snow on the lake shore of Erie, and that the winter was attended with very little delay and no inconvenience from the late storm which they were in.

Everything lovely in Center, especially the newly laid out roads, which are as picturesque as they are grand.

Tobacco buyers are quite numerous, and have succeeded in buying most of the '80 crop, prices ranging from 8 to 12 1/2 cents.

John Crow's family horse while in the barn yard with other horses, was so badly kicked as to make it necessary to take it to life.

O. A. Parmley started for his Nebraska home last Wednesday.

J. B. Cleland, of Osage, Iowa, and W. A. Cleland, of Fargo, Dakota, are both expected home the last of the present week.

Owing to the inclement weather and bad roads, the anti-horse thieves did not meet pursuant to call.

The annual meeting of the Christian church, is called for Monday, the 21st inst., at 1 o'clock. All interested are requested to be present, as it is a general business meeting.

The Post of Honor.

When vice prevails and impious men bear sway, the post of honor is a private station.

"ADDISON." When Rheumatism and Neuralgia prevail, Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil is the best remedy.

"FOSTER, MILLBURN & CO." Sold by A. J. Roberts and Croft & Sherer.

My First Ride on an Ice-Yacht.

The speed of the ice-boat is incredible, and it will when sailing across the wind go faster than the gale that propels it. This seeming paradox has been so clearly shown that I shall not take the space to explain it now.

The reason for the amazing numbers of ice-boats is because anybody with a hammer and saw and a few boards can make one. Even the largest of them are not expensive except as far as the sail is concerned.

Toronto Bay is about three miles wide and seven or eight miles long, at least those were about its dimensions when I was there quite a few years ago. A long low sandy island keeps out the waves of Lake Ontario and as there is no current the bay has nothing to do when winter sets in, but freeze, and it generally stays frozen until navigation is open everywhere else.

I only had one ride on an ice-yacht, but I remember the trip with tolerable clearness.

There is nothing quite so bright and fresh—especially the latter—as a student who is taking in his first experience of city life. Two of us in this callow condition had trotted down the crisp frozen street to the Esplanade, where Toronto turns out to see the skaters and the ice-yachts. A gay party of four were just hoisting the big triangular sail of yachts that lay on the ice at the wharf. The Captain marked us as his prey.

"Have a ride over to the island, gentlemen!"

The delicately-applied flattery which he disguised in the word "gentlemen" captured us, and my comrade answered for both and said: "We would be most happy."

We sprang down on the ice and took our places on the triangular framework.

There were no seats, unless the cross scantlings could be so called; some sat on those and some on the flooring. One of the men shoved around the sharp end of the triangle, which had fixed at the point a movable skate attached to a lever, after the manner of the helm of a sail-boat. At each other point of the triangle was a fixed skate, and from between them rose the mast. The man pushed the ice-yacht out from the lee of the wharf and sprang on board.

The wind merely touched the sail, yet we slid along faster than some boys who were skating could keep with us. One urchin asked if he might hang on. He was given a cordial permission, and he held the point of the triangle, and placing his feet together, skated along without any exertion. The instant we were out of the influence of the warehouses, the boat shot ahead like a thing of life.

The man at the wheel winked at his companions, and suddenly veered the boat around. This was for the benefit of the boy on skates. Instead of tumbling over, however, he slid out at right angles, triumphant, kept his feet like a little man, and found time to make a derisive motion with his hand. He had been there before.

Now that the gale struck us the speed became terrific. We two held on by the timbers, but were laughed at by our companions, who, accustomed to the motion, sat unconcerned.

Every now and then a white flake of spun ice encountered that perceptibly lessened the speed, and when a boat struck a patch it was with difficulty that we kept our places. We skimmed among the other yachts and threaded between skaters in a way that made freedom from accident marvelous.

Most of the time one skate rarely touched the ice, merely dipping down on the crystal surface now and then to dart white flake of spun ice from the glistening blade. I was in a constant terror that the boat would upset, which, I gathered from the conversation of the boatmen, was a frequent occurrence. We now rapidly neared the island.

"Where do you wish to land, gentlemen?" asked the wheelsman.

My friend was past speaking, so I answered: "Oh, anywhere; we're not particular."

"All right," he cried, making straight for the island until within a few rods of it, when he suddenly turned the helm about at right angles.

Natural philosophy has taught me that the ice-boat must have very hastily left her course when the helm was changed. I therefore firmly believe to this day that she did change, but personally I have no knowledge of the fact. I wasn't-a-going to change my course merely because the boat did. I kept right on, and I will do my friend the justice to say that he stuck by me.

We slid the remainder of the distance to the island, rapidly assuming new postures all the while, and allowing for increased friction, made almost as good time as the yacht would have done. The speed wasn't what we grumbled about. We rolled over a good part of the way across the island before we concluded to stop.

My friend, being a man of piety and principle, was deprived of the consolatory influence that I—who had no such scruples—proceeded to surround myself with. I gave him my opinion of our last companions in a series of epigrams that I flatter myself did justice to the occasion. He silently brushed off his clothes and quietly took a sort of inventory of the damages, listening all the while, doubtless with some satisfaction, to my impassioned eloquence.

Street Signs in Japan.

In regard to street signs in Japan it may be said that, although the gorgeous ornamentation which characterizes the street signs of the Chinese tradesmen is not met with in Japan, each trade is, nevertheless, represented by its distinctive and peculiar sign. A cluster of cypress, trimmed into spherical shape, and varying from one to two feet in diameter, furnishes the ancient sake or liquor-shop sign. It is also customary to place the young vines of this tree in the bung-holes of the kegs or in the mouths of bottles, the spines being downward. The prickly spines are said to ward off insects and keep the sake sweet. The hatters suspend a long string of hats from their shop, and the macaroni dealers affix to their shop fronts a large paper lantern, which enumerates the name of the house, the edibles it will supply, and their price per bowl.

The original price was two pieces of silver, or .008 parts of a Mexican dollar. Hostlers employ a sign which represents one side of a stocking, which is so made as to allow of the great toe being separate from the others. Deni Ya, the sellers of crimson cosmetic for painting women's lips, exhibit a small crimson flag Susui Ya, the purveyors of small rolls of rice and fish, furnishing each about two months full—the Japanese sandwich in fact—used along with their house name, and an enumeration of the various articles they prepare: Malz, (pine), mizago, so called from a fishing-bird; kenkai, (boned fowl), and inari, are a few of these names. Wrestlers write their names on a board. Theaters exhibit representations of the most telling scenes in the piece being played. Herbalists and druggists display monstrous bags, resembling in shape the small ones used in infusing the medicines. Makers of rosaries suspend a large rosary from their shops. Goldbeaters' signs, unlike the gilt arm we are accustomed to, are a pair of large square spectacles, the space of the glasses being filled up with sheets of gold-leaf. A sign may be observed composed of two tai or fish, the fish being colored red, and represented as if tied together by the gills with straw. This is usually exhibited by dealers in dried and salt fish, eggs, etc., and is employed to denote that the shop can supply the usual presents to betrothed persons. Sellers of cut-flowers plant a willow tree at one corner of the house. Retail tea-dealers exhibit a small jar, and lacquer men a chip box, used to contain lacquered ware. Tobaccoists display their names and trademarks on a reddish-brown strip of cloth hung up in front of their shops.

Workers in hair show a small octagon box, with a fringe of hair hanging from it. Kite-makers use a sign a cuttlefish, both kite and fish being known as tako. Ama, or sweet-cake, dealers exhibit a painting of Fujiyama. Many other signs, as may be imagined, are employed by the Japanese shopkeepers to illustrate the nature of their occupations. To explain these would be, for various reasons, impracticable here.—Cor. Boston Herald.

The Story of the Trojan Horse.

But nevertheless Troy was to remain impregnable so long as it retained the Palladium, which, as we have before said, had been given by Zeus to the founder of the city, Ius. Ulysses, however, having disguised his person with miserable clothes and self-inflicted wounds, introduced himself into the city and found means to carry away the Palladium by stealth. He was recognized only by Helen, who concerted with him means for the capture of the town. A final stratagem was resorted to. At the suggestion of Athene, Epeius and Panopius constructed a hollow wooden horse, capacious enough to contain one hundred men. In this horse the most eminent of the Greek heroes concealed themselves, while the whole Greek army, having burned the tents and pretended to give up the siege, sailed away with their ships, which they anchored behind Tenedos. Overjoyed to see themselves finally relieved, the Trojans issued from the city and wondered at the stupendous horse, on which was written that it was dedicated to Athene by the departing Greeks. They were not long at a loss what to do with it; and the anxious heroes from within heard their consultations, as well as the voice of Helen when she pronounced the name of each hero, counterfeiting the accent of his wife's voice. Some desired to bring it into the city and to dedicate it to the gods; others advised distrust at the enemy's legacy. Laocoon, the priest of Poseidon, came with his two sons, and, in his indignation, thrust his spear against the horse. The sound revealed that the horse was hollow; but at the same moment Laocoon and one of his sons perished miserably, two monstrous serpents having been sent by Hera out of the sea to destroy them. The Trojans, terrified by this spectacle, and persuaded by the perfidious counsels of the traitor Sinon—who had been expressly left behind by the Greeks to give them false information—were induced to drag the fatal fabric into their city; and as the gate was not broad enough to admit it, they even made a breach in their own wall. Thus the horse was introduced into the Acropolis and placed in the Agora before Priam's Palace. But even now opinions were divided; many demanding that the horse should be cut in pieces, others advising that it should be dragged to the highest point of the Acropolis and thrown thence on the rocks below. The strongest party, however, insisted on its being dedicated to the gods as a token of gratitude for their deliverance.

After sunset the Greek fleet returned to the shore of the plain of Troy and awaited the preconcerted signal. While the Trojans indulged in riotous festivities Simon kindled the fire-signal and assisted the concealed heroes to open the secret door in the horse's belly, out of which they descended. The city was now assailed from within and without, and was completely sacked and destroyed, nearly the whole population being slain. Priam, who had vainly sought shelter at the altar of Zeus Herkeios, was killed by Neoptolemus. His son Deiphobus, who, after the death of his brother Paris, had become the husband of Helen, was attacked by Ulysses and Menelaus. He defended his house desperately, but was finally overcome and slain. Thus Menelaus at length won back his wife.—Dr. Schlemm's Atlas.

HUMOROUS.

A Spanish doctor has gone crazy because he couldn't exactly understand why a person's teeth chattered when he was cold. He should have asked some bootblack.

When a grocer advertises every variety of "raisins" for sale, does he include dandruffs, pulleys, jack screws, yeast, rope and tackle and that sort of thing?—Stoughtonville Herald.

We see an article in the papers about boy inventors. We hope they will invent a boy who won't whistle through his fingers and yell on the streets at night.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

The world is like a skating park, nice when you can slide smoothly over its surface, but cruel and cold to sit down on when you get your feet knocked from under you.—Whitehall Times.

"THERE is no place like home," but nine men out of ten will leave it six months a year for a $2,000 Government office in Washington. And the tenth man will accept a $1,500 position.—Norristown Herald.

MISTRESS:—As you've never been in service, I'm afraid I can't engage you without a "character." Young Person:—I have three School-Board certificates, ma'am. Mistress:—Oh, well, I suppose for honesty, cleanliness—Young Person:—No, ma'am; for literacy, jigger ph, an' free 'and drawin'!—London Punch.

A BALTIMORE philosopher says that no man can ever rise above that at which he aims. At the same time we are known a man to aim to be a Mississippi River steamer captain, and rise above his position, about one hundred and fifty feet. He was greatly esteemed by the company.—New York Commercial.

HOW IT WORKED.

There was a man in our town. He was so wonderful wise; He thought his business would run itself, And he didn't advertise.

Well, business was dull at first, But better times came, and it's queer, One day with a rush he sold all his stuff, But the sheriff was auctioning his dealer.
